

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

for mere lack of light, but always and everywhere for their abuse of light. The moral government of God is similar to the Juvenile Court methods of Judge Lindsey: the cross is the sign of the grace of God who offers a new evangelical probation made concrete and manifest in Jesus Christ. Dr. Mabie's style is racy and clear.

English Literary Miscellany, by T. W. Hunt (Bibliotheca Sacra Co., 1914), is a series of literary studies on Shakespeare, Milton, the Brownings, etc., which had already appeared in divers magazines.

In the Face of Jesus Christ, by David Jenks (Longmans, $2.00), is a collection of 496 devotional meditations packed full of ideas from the point of view of an Anglo-Catholic priest.

Cross and Passion, by George Hodges (Macmillan, $1.00), is a series of eight excellent meditations for Good Friday by the Dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge.

The Immortal Seven, by James L. Hill (American Baptist Publication Society, $0.50 net), is a thrilling story of Dr. Adoniram Judson and his helpers in pioneer missionary work in Burma. The volume is well illustrated. It is interesting to compare things as they were a hundred years ago, both in this country and in Burma, with what they are now.

Le Muséon.—One of the strange effects of the European war is the fact that the oldest journal, Le Muséon, published by the University of Louvain, is now published through the courtesy of the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, England, and the American agency for the publication has just been undertaken by the University of Chicago Press. Over two hundred pages of material for the third and fourth numbers of Le Muséon for 1914 are supposed to have been lost in the fire which destroyed the offices of the Belgian publisher in the early days of August; and one of the collaborators on the last number of the journal was taken prisoner in the war and died in a hospital.

All supporters of oriental studies will be glad to know that the first issue of this journal for 1915 will soon be published, with contributions from many well-known Continental and English scholars, and interest in a review published under such unusual circumstances is confidently expected to be shown by American scholars especially interested in such fields of research. All inquiries and subscriptions may be sent to the University of Chicago Press.

A new edition of Dean Hodges' book on Faith and Social Service ($1.25) has been published by the Macmillan Company. Dean Hodges treats of the new forces in the history of civilization and shows how the co-operation of churches will go far toward solving the problems of poverty, both intellectual and social.

George Hodges' book on The Episcopal Church, Its Faith and Order (New York: Macmillan, $1.25) is a series of ten lectures on the doctrine and discipline of the Protestant Episcopal church. While Dean Hodges' conception of the church is not accepted by all the bishops and clergy of the Episcopal church, Christians of other denominations will think that if it was more general among them the cause of Christian unity would be more hopeful. Although the book is primarily meant for the use of clergymen who are teaching confirmation classes for adults, it will be found by others a very clear account of what the Episcopal church in general stands for.

The Christian Life. By R. H. Coats (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 6d net) is a handbook for the use of study-circles written from an undenominational point of view. This little manual of 164 pages is packed full of matter and under the direction of an intelligent leader would do excellent service.

The Offerings Made Like unto the Son of God, by W. S. Moule (Longmans, $2.00) is a series of studies on the Levitical ritual such as were commonly written fifty years ago. The author ignores the results of the study of Semitic religions and does not take into consideration the development of the religion of Israel. The only modern thing in the book is the fanciful statement that biblical criticism is the cause of what Mr. Moule calls "the moral attitude of the German nation today." There are probably in Mr. Moule's communion more clergymen who have accepted the modern conception of the Bible than in the Lutheran church itself.

The Revelation of Discovery, by Bishop Brent (Longmans, $1.00 net), is a series of ten studies on the Christian faith; their leading idea is that to God's manifestation to mankind must answer a corresponding will to search God, the Christian creed being such an effort.